Frozen Turkey Cooking Instructions

1. Thawing: Thaw the turkey in the refrigerator for about 24 hours for every 5 pounds of turkey. So, for a 10-pound turkey, you'll need approximately 48 hours. Make sure to place the turkey in a leak-proof plastic bag or on a tray to catch any drips.
2. Preheat the oven: Preheat your oven to 325°F (163°C).
3. Prepare the turkey: Remove the giblets and neck from the turkey's cavity. Rinse the turkey inside and out, then pat it dry with paper towels. Season the turkey with your preferred seasonings and herbs.
4. Roasting: Place the turkey on a rack in a roasting pan. You can add some aromatics like onions, carrots, and celery to the pan for extra flavor. Tent the turkey loosely with aluminum foil.
5. Cooking time: To determine the approximate cooking time, you can follow the general rule of 20 minutes per pound. For a 10-pound turkey, that's about 3 hours and 20 minutes. However, you should use a meat thermometer to ensure the turkey reaches an internal temperature of 165°F (74°C) in the thickest part of the thigh.
6. Basting (optional): You can baste the turkey every 30 minutes with the juices from the bottom of the pan to keep it moist.
7. Uncover for browning: About 30 minutes before the turkey is expected to be done, remove the foil to allow the skin to brown.
8. Resting: Once the turkey reaches 165°F (74°C), remove it from the oven and let it rest for at least 20-30 minutes before carving. This allows the juices to redistribute, resulting in a juicier turkey.
9. Carving: Carve the turkey and enjoy your meal!

Remember to use a meat thermometer to ensure the turkey is thoroughly cooked to avoid any food safety concerns.

Happy Thanksgiving from Perenich Law Injury Attorneys!

Perenich Law Injury Attorneys' Digital Marketing Specialist, Chris Schneider, interviewed Attorney Timothy Perenich for a Q&A to discuss his new role as Managing Partner at Perenich Law Injury Attorneys. Timothy, Gregory, and Terence -- all three partners at Perenich Law -- take turns as Managing Partner of their firm.

Here is the Q&A with Managing Partner Timothy Perenich:

Q: What drew you to personal injury law?

A: My father was the first personal injury lawyer in the Tampa Bay area, and he would invite me to court hearings and depositions. I worked in his office during high school and summer breaks from college and law school, and this experience gave me the opportunity to see firsthand how a successful personal injury law firm operated. He ran his practice very well, and that inspired me.

Q: What are some key attributes of a successful managing partner?

A: To be a successful managing partner, you must have good organization, perseverance, and the ability to think outside the box. In other words, be very problem-solving orientated.

Q: What advice would you give to a personal injury attorney that recently started their own practice?

A: I would say work on the business as much as you work in it. In other words, focus on advertising and word-of-mouth marketing to grow the practice, all while creating and maintaining strong client relationships. Devote twice as much time working on the business as you think you need to and develop systems to increase efficiency in your practice.

Q: In your opinion, what are the biggest challenges facing managing partners today?

A: A big one is attracting and retaining qualified & reliable staff. I think we do a great job in that, as well as keeping up with advancing technology to maximize efficiency in the office.

Q: What does personal injury law look like in Florida in the next five years?

A: Injury law looks very different in the next five years than today. Generally, lawyers will be more selective about the cases they take in due to the recent Florida law change. I think more lawyers will need to go to trial to obtain reasonable settlements than we're seeing today.

Q: When did you and your brothers start Perenich Law Injury Attorneys? Whose idea was it to form the 3BrothersHelpingOthers?

A: My brother Greg and I partnered in 2005, and collectively, we decided to become an injury law firm when my brother Terence joined us. Greg came up with the '3BrothersHelpingOthers' slogan, and my brother Terence and I loved the catchiness of it so much that it kind of just stuck with us ever since.

Q: What do you think sets Perenich Law Injury Attorneys apart from other local PI firms?

A: We're family oriented. I think we generally care more about our clients than most other lawyers. We have a proven record of obtaining higher verdicts and settlements than most other firms for any given case, generally. And I think we're great at communicating with our clients.

Unlike many other body parts, the brain cannot always heal completely on its own after sustaining severe external trauma. There is only so much that modern medical professionals can do to reduce the impact of injuries like these. Unfortunately, this means that when someone acts irresponsibly and causes someone else to suffer a traumatic brain injury (TBI), the consequences of their actions are often debilitating and permanent.

Money alone cannot erase the negative impacts of a TBI, but pursuing fair financial restitution with a catastrophic injury attorney's help can still be key to maximizing your quality of life after sustaining an injury of this nature. From start to finish of your legal proceedings, a Trinity traumatic brain injury lawyer at Perenich Law Injury Attorneys could work tenaciously to enforce your rights and secure the best case result possible for your specific situation.

Proving that Negligence Led to Traumatic Brain Damage

While TBIs are a particularly serious type of personal injury, their severity does not change any of the rules set by Florida state law that govern personal injury litigation. To hold someone else legally responsible for the effects of a traumatic brain injury, the injured person filing suit—or whoever is acting on a severely disabled person's behalf—must establish legal "negligence" by the person or people they are suing over that injury, as an experienced Trinity TBI attorney could explain in more detail.

Someone is "negligent" if they directly cause an otherwise avoidable accident by acting carelessly, recklessly, or unlawfully in violation of a "duty of care," resulting in another person's injury serious enough to require professional medical care. For example, everyone who drives on public Florida roads has the same "duty" to obey traffic laws and generally act reasonably and safely behind the wheel. So, anyone who causes a wreck by committing a traffic violation would likely be liable based on their negligence for any injuries that wreck results in.

Traumatic Brain Injuries

Recovering Comprehensively Within Filing Deadlines

Someone found to have caused traumatic brain damage to another person through their own negligence can be made to pay financially for every economic and non-economic consequence that accident has. Importantly, compensable losses in a case like this can—and generally should—account for both past and future losses relative to when civil proceedings begin, including:

- Physical discomfort and pain
- Emotional and psychological distress
- Lost working capacity or work income
- Lost overall enjoyment of life, including lost consortium
- Short-term and long-term medical bills, plus injury related expenses for things like assistive medical equipment, home/vehicle modifications, and in-home care

Even if a TBI is expected to last for an injured person's entire remaining life, though, they cannot wait until the full value of their long-term losses becomes clear before filing suit. This is because the "statute of limitations" codified in Florida Statutes § 95.11 establishes a four-year filing period—beginning when an injury first occurred—for virtually everyone who intends to sue over any personal injury. Failing to start a claim within this deadline—with or without assistance from a traumatic brain injury lawyer in Trinity—will almost always lead to the court throwing that claim out for being "time-barred."

Speak With a Trinity Traumatic Brain Injury Attorney Today

Traumatic brain damage is one of the most consequential and life-altering outcomes that any serious accident can have. When someone else's negligence is the sole reason that an accident like this happened in the first place, you may have grounds to pursue legal action against them and demand compensation for every negative effect your TBI will have on your life.

Support from a Trinity traumatic brain injury lawyer can be crucial to obtaining fair financial restitution from this uniquely tricky type of claim. Learn more by calling Perenich Law Injury Attorneys today. We are 3 brothers with a mission of helping others.
